

Exit Planning

Like the majority of business owners, selling your business will probably be a once in a lifetime transaction – one shot to get it right to secure your financial future.

Our experience has shown that a business owner who sells his or her business without a proactive and well thought-out exit plan typically sells it for too little. By looking at your finances in good time before you leave your business you have the opportunity to improve the business, increase its attractiveness and profitability and thereby improve its value.

An exit plan looks at:

- Your personal financial position and future requirements;
- Your personal hopes and aspirations;
- The financial position of the business;
- What needs to be done to improve the attractiveness of the business, and;
- The tax aspects from both a business and personal perspective.

Hawsons have trained exit planning advisers who can help with all aspects of exit planning.

Maximising your business value

Here are four key questions to ask yourself:

- How much is your business worth today?
- What price will you sell your business for?
- When do you want to sell your business?
- How much money do you need to fund your retirement?

Having a plan of how you are going to exit your business and executing that plan over a period of time generally leads to a better outcome than when things are dealt with in an ad hoc way.

By looking at your business from a buyer's perspective you have the opportunity to improve the business, increase its attractiveness and profitability and thereby improve its value.

Additionally, many business owners see their business as their pension but how do you know what your business will be worth or what you need to fund your retirement without proactive and thorough exit planning?

You need to have an exit plan in place to ensure your business is ready for sale in order to protect your future. Take our short business attractiveness test to see how highly your business scores.
